

8/12/1972

WOMEN'S

BREAKING DOWN PREJUDICE—

Irish visitors' aim

IS IRELAND too tough for God? It's a question more than one visiting statesman to Northern Ireland, has asked.

It's a question that Lady Fiona Hannon, daughter of the Duke of Montrose, has often had thrust at her. Her answer is "Moral Rearmament".

Lady Fiona has lived in Bel-with Moral Rearmament for about 20 years," Lady Fiona told the Cape Times.

"One objective of moral rearmament is to create an Ireland which will be an answer to division — not only in Ireland but in all divided countries," Lady Fiona said.

Lady Fiona, who was born in Scotland, and her husband, Peter, believe personal contact with the people, public meetings, films, and discussions with leaders in church and educational bodies, and those deeply involved in politics on both sides, is the only way to approach Moral Rearmament.

"I have been working with all sections of the community to see how a nucleus of a new leadership could be raised to have an answer to the prejudice, fear and exploitation that has created the trouble in Northern Ireland," Mr. Hannon said.

But during their visit to Cape Town, it's more pleasure than work.

"Peter is having a well-earned six-month break," Lady Fiona said. "Although he is still working with 'Moral Rearmament' here."

They are travelling South Africa with their two daughters, Catherine and Veronica.

Yesterday, they visited the Cape Town Civilian Blind Society—to say "Thank you".

"When we were married we were given a lunch set made at the institute," Lady Fiona said. "We wanted to say 'thank you' for ourselves and see where it was made."

The gift was given to them by Mr. John Becker, brother of Mr. H. V. Becker, manager of the Civilian Blind.

Lady Fiona Hannon in the weaving workshop at the Cape Town Civilian Blind Society in Salt River — a visit to say "Thank you".

fast since her marriage six years ago to Mr. Peter Hannon, son of Archdeacon Hannon.

"But I've been connected